

Susan Levinsohn, MD, works as an assistant clinical professor at SUNY Upstate Medical University in the Department of Preventative and Family Practice. Here she created the Wellness Curriculum for the new Family Medicine residency and co-created the Food as Medicine course for medical students. She continues to be involved in these courses and loves being able to teach the next generation of doctors.

Dr. Levinsohn is now in the process of founding and developing Willow Health Integrative Medicine. WHIM is the first family practice in Syracuse which is committed to Integrative Medicine and will function as a direct primary care practice. Its planned start date is winter, 2021.
